It takes a special potato to make great fries. That's one thing America's top chefs agree on. These expert cooks know that there are all kinds of potatoes, and each kind is good for a specific purpose. Russet potatoes, for example, are great for baking. Red potatoes are best when boiled. White potatoes are tastiest in potato salad. The chefs also agree that potatoes are very nutritious. Potatoes contain protein and many vitamins. As single potato provides 50 percent of the daily requirement for vitamin C. In fact, potatoes, like lemons, were once prized by sailors. Vitamin C prevents scurvy. On long ocean voyages, eating potatoes helped seafarers avoid getting the disease. To get the most nutrients out of a potato, listen to the chefs. They say to cook potatoes with the skin on. Vitamins are lost when potatoes are peeled before cooking. One thing the chefs can't agree on is where the best potatoes are grown. Some say Washington. Others say Idaho. One maintains that it is Wisconsin.
