Starfish, sometimes called sea stars, are found in all of the world's oceans, even in the icy Arctic Ocean. They are a kind of ocean invertebrate, which means they lack backbones. All starfish have at least five arms, but some have more. Many kinds of starfish can regrow arms that are bitten off by predators. Starfish can be dull or colorful and come in many different sizes. Scientists believe there are more than 1,500 types of starfish.

Starfish attack and eat other invertebrates. Some starfish, however, are harmful to undersea communities because they eat special kinds of coral or fish. Starfish are rarely eaten by humans because their bodies are bony and taste bad. Humans often use them as ornaments or collectibles.

Frogs live on land and in water. Frogs have long back legs and short bodies. Their eyes stick out. They do not have tails. Most of the time they move in the water, but they can also move on land. Frogs have smooth, not bumpy, skin. They can breathe through their skin. Their skin must stay wet so they can breathe through it. Young frogs must breathe through their skin. Older frogs grow lungs. They breathe through their lungs when they are on land, just like people do. Frogs lay their eggs in ponds and other bodies of water, like lakes. Frogs must move fast to catch something to eat. They must also get away from bigger animals. Some frogs have webs of skin between their toes. Webbed toes are good because it helps them to swim very fast. Tree frogs have toe pads. The toe pads help them hang on when they climb. When they climb, they move up trees or rocks. Some tree frogs live high in very tall trees. Those tree frogs have webs between their toes. They can jump from tree to tree. They can't fly, but they can stay in the air for a long jump.

Automakers have gone far beyond just gasoline or diesel engines. There are new and environmentally friendly technologies such as hybrid cars, plug-in hybrid, electric, and even hydrogen cars. Hybrid cars are those vehicles that use two or more different power sources to move the vehicle. Apart from gasoline engine, these vehicles have an electric motor and a battery, but still they can't be plugged in and recharged. In the field of hybrid vehicles, Toyoto is a leader. It introduced the Toyoto Prius in 1998 which is broadly accepted by reducing air emissions up to 90%. Battery electric cars run on energy stored in batteries and have an electric motor. As these vehicles are operated entirely by electricity, they don't produce emissions. These vehicles have the highest-capacity batteries and the most range, but once the battery is depleted, it needs to be recharged, which can take a few hours. Even though electric cars are expensive and sometimes have a bit of a charging problem, these cars are an excellent option.

Plug-in hybrid electric cars are hybrid electric vehicles, except that in PHEV, batteries can be charged by plugging them into an outlet. These vehicles come with high-capacity batteries that allow them to drive for a longer period of time. These vehicles can even drive solely by an electric motor for a certain amount of miles without consuming gasoline. As these vehicles run on electricity that is a clean energy source, they contribute less to global warming.

Frogs live on land and in water. Frogs have long back legs and short bodies. Their eyes stick out. They do not have tails. Most of the time they move in the water, but they can also move on land. Frogs have smooth, not bumpy, skin. They can breathe through their skin. Their skin must stay wet so they can breathe through it.

Young frogs must breathe through their skin. Older frogs grow lungs. They breathe through their lungs when they are on land, just like people do. Frogs lay their eggs in ponds and other bodies of water, like lakes.

Frogs must move fast to catch something to eat. They must also get away from bigger animals. Some frogs have webs of skin between their toes. Webbed toes are good because it helps them to swim very fast. Tree frogs have toe pads. The toe pads help them hang on when they climb. When they climb, they move up trees or rocks. Some tree frogs live high in very tall trees. Those tree frogs have webs between their toes. They can jump from tree to tree. They can't fly, but they can stay in the air for a long jump.
